The motion capture was conducted by the motion capture team at EA Sports using the NFL Players, a top-tier platform, and the PSP accessory created by EA SPORTS (Sensing Processor and Gaming Processor). The NFL Players platform combines PlayStation Eye's 1080p HD sensing technology with sophisticated pattern recognition software to combine and process the player's environment and capture their actions with high accuracy and robustness. "Motion capture has been a key element to success in sports video games for more than a decade," said Matt Bilbey, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. "The HyperMotion Technology that we've developed for Fifa 22 Cracked Version opens the door for a new level of real-player impact and authenticity. This team-driven effort represents the most comprehensive athlete database and processing pipeline in our history, and will continue to elevate the realism and gameplay experience for years to come.” The data from the motion capture motion capture sessions, along with the data from real-world players and players of other teams, is processed through sophisticated pattern recognition software to create a player-specific model. The model is then used to drive every player's specific appearance, animation, running gait and movement. “The motion capture technology and expertise from the NFL Players platform combined with the detailed knowledge of our in-house pro team allowed us to capture a variety of real-world game data and from that create an entirely new sense of realism in soccer,” said Bill Hopkins, FIFA Program Manager. “Using this data we are capturing every nuance of player interactions and movement, and the performance of the FIFA 22 team is legendary.” Stay tuned for more information about the features included in FIFA 22, coming later this year.
